Perhaps baby likes the new world he discovered on his venturesome voyage. If he does, why he will smile and one dimple at least is the result. If he smiles twice, why you may count on two. But he always cries, you will say. Granted; but his is no cry of pain. His is a bird's salutation to the morn -shriller, perhaps, because his vocal chords are as yet undeveloped, but nevertheless a psean of joy. Many nurses offer a simpler explanation and a more plausible one than this, that dimples are the smiles of the soul.

SALUTING THE BABY. Have you noticed a man or woman salute a baby? If you have—and the chances are fer the death penalty for killing a negro that you have—you will agree that one of the first salutations is a gentie caress with thumb in Mississippi. In the summer of 1888 Tilman was brought before the grand and forefinger placed near the corners of the mouth. Some instinct impels us thus to greet tury to give evidence in reference to gambling at a place nine miles east of Grenada where Cheatham kept a store, the cherub. On July 13 the news was brought to town that Tilman was missing and on the Sunday following his body was found in the river with several heavy stones tied to him Cheatham, Lemon, Robinson and the Irvings were placed under arrest within a few days. Upon the trial Lee Irving related the history of the crime, as follows: Thursday night he left the church on his way home and was met by Lemon, who came near shooting him, mistaking him for Tilman. On perceiving his mistake, however, Lemon made him dismount and join the other prisoners. The crowd walked up the road and ambushed themselves. Tilman came along about 11 o'clock. Cheatham, with a donble barreled gun, sent nine buckshot crashing through his lungs and head. The gang then picked him up, before he was quite dead, put him in a sack, threw him across a saddle and went to the river. There the body was taken out of the sack, stones tied to him and he was thrown into the river. Cheatham was tried and convicted, the case was appealed and the decision of the lower court affirmed.

It would be a task, indeed, to calculate the number of such greetings bestowed on the darling's face from infancy till that period when, if a boy, he resents fondling, and true to nature's course, he becomes more and more the individual and less of his kind. For the baby belongs to humanity, the boy to his chums and the man to himself.

If the darling be a girl she probably gets more caresses than her brother. Hence she is more likely to have dimples. And if they are of the genuine slow growth, not compul sory kind, she has a rare prize. But she must get them before she is 16-yes, years before

Certain beautifiers declare that even in the adult they can produce dimples by a semisurgical process. This may be, but, after all, the secret spring of the dimple is the soul. As the latter overflows with smiles the face assumes a radiance that art cannot imitate. Plue eyes or black sparkle as the light rushes upward from its hidden caves, cheeks glow and dimples appear.

For a girl, two dimples, one at each corner of the mouth, or near those points, are a lavish gift. The daintiest smile will bring themout well defined and ravishing, a broad grin will expand them into furrows.
